ABOUT THE WORK

Description: Blush and Earth explores the meeting of strength and softness through richly layered texture and color. Cracks and craters create a weathered, enduring surface, while gentle blush and peach tones bring warmth and quiet optimism; touches of green introduce a natural rhythm, with subtle traces of gold catching the light. The work suggests resilience without hardness—a reminder that beauty can be both grounded and tender.

Inspiration: The inspiration for Blush and Earth came from a walk through Peter's Canyon, where I was captivated by the colors and forms surrounding me. The tall trees, with their elongated trunks and flowing vertical lines, left a lasting impression, as did the unexpected harmony of earthy greens, warm browns, and delicate blush tones throughout the landscape. I wanted to translate that experience into a textured surface, allowing the vertical patterns to echo the trees while the layered colors and organic formations reflect the canyon's natural complexity. For me, the piece captures the quiet beauty of that encounter—a place where strength and softness, ruggedness and tenderness, exist side by side.
